Dollar After the Fall: The Analysts Predict A Period of Stability

By Bob Hagerty
International Herald Tribune
LONDON — Economists have been predicting the immi-

years. At last, foreign exchange traders seem to agree.

The dollar was little changed Thursday. But the nervous sta-banking system.

That decline has brought the dollar down about 10 percent against the Deutsche mark, to 3.1210 DM at Thursday's close in New York from the 13-year high of 3.4780 DM reached in late February.

The dollar's decline has been even sharper against the pound, which had risen to $1.2275 at the close Thursday in New York from a low of about $1.04 a month ago. The Japanese yen has gained about 4 percent and the French franc 9 percent.

Even so, the dollar remains relatively high. A year ago, it stood at 2.60 marks, and most economists said it was grossly overvalued. Few analysts predict that the dollar will continue to fall so precipitately as it has in recent days. The general feeling is that the U.S. currency will be stable or slightly up in next few days in reaction to the recent phinge.

Looking further ahead, the question is so complex and economists have been wrong so often that they hesitate to make firm predictions. But Mr. Morrison and many others say the dollar has probably passed its

One reason to expect a weak er dollar is that the currency's five-year surge has begun to draw howls of pain from U.S. industry and agriculture, whose products are being priced out of foreign markets.

The U.S. Commerce Depart ment reported Thursday that the country's merchandise trade deficit widened in February to a seasonally adjusted $11.45 billion from $10.29 bil-lion in January. Commerce Sec-retary Malcolm Baldrige predicted that the strong dollar would lead to even bigger defi-cits in the months ahead.

Such a dismal trading performance is prompting U.S. companies and farmers to demand vernment action to nudge the dollar down.

Eastman Kodak Co. estimated Thursday that over the past four years its earnings have been reduced $500 million because of the dollar's rise as foreign-currency profits have de-dined in dollar terms. "Our troubles and our difficulties are over," Mr. Dumas said.
Other EC officials predicted that the remaining minor obstacles would be resolved and an agreement reached within hours.

"The problems are becoming wa-fer-thin," one said.

After the foreign ministers completed the details of their terms of entry, EC officials began meeting separately with negotiators for Spain and Portugal.

If the terms are acceptable, the accord was to be completed in a full meeting of the foreign ministers. ■ Farm Freeze Rejected

In Bonn, Agriculture Minister Ignaz Kiechle insisted Thursday that he would not accept EC Com-mission proposals to freeze farm prices. He said he was defending West Germany's national interest.

"We will not make any more sacrifices," Mr. Kiechle said at a news conference. He said Chancellor Helmut Kohl had backed his views on EC farm prices for the year beginning April 1.

Agriculture ministers are due to resume price talks in Luxemboure on Monday after three days of negotiations in Brussels this week.

Britain's farm minister, Michael Jopling, blamed the lack of head-way on Mr. Kiechle's refusal to accept price cuts in the key cereal

"Our initial review indicates that the inspector-general's findings are substantially correct," Mr. Orr wrote. "Based upon the circumstances surrounding the execution of these procurements, it is appropriate that I take the exceptional action of requesting a voluntary refund under fixed-price contracts.

"This request does not in any way waive any legal rights for recovery that the government may have under the contracts associated with these unreasonable profits."

According to a summary of the inspector-general's audit report, the excess profits were paid to both companies in part because inflation rates were much lower than originally anticipated in 1982 and 1983. #### Charter 77: In Pain but Alive Czechoslovak Dissident Group Survives Against the Odds

By Bradley Graham Washington Post Service
PRAGUE — In the Soviet bloc, Czechoslovakia's Charter 77 is an example of survival against the Eastern Europe's oldest dissident group, marking its eighth an-niversary, recently issued a lengthy restatement of principles, in part to remind the world that it still exists and in part to clarify for supporters what the movement stands for.

Charter TT's field of comment has broadened since its founding in 1977 in defense of human rights. In recent years, it has produced reports on such diverse topics as pollution, rock music and drugs. Its aim, supporters say, is to offer Czechoslovaks an alternative voice to their Communist government.

A lengthy appeal recently issued by the charter movement called for the dissolution of NATO and the Warsaw Pact and the creation of an association of "free and autonomous" European nations. "Perhaps such an ideal seems a dream." the 17-page document said. "Yet we are convinced that it represents the will of most Europeans."

Going up against one of the sternest regimes in the Communist world has been a painful experience for many signers of the char-ter. Many have been or are still being prosecuted, and often impris-oned, for participating in the move-

Public Aspect of Private Talks Arms Negotiations Are Confidential, but PR War Isn't

By Joseph Fitchett International Herald Tribune

PARIS - As the U.S.-Soviet ms-control talks got under way in Geneva this month, the public promptly got a taste of the rhetorical posturing that will accompany the secret bargaining over weap-

An example surfaced Wednes-day when the Soviet delegation called in reporters to challenge a news article that had appeared in the International Herald Tribune

The article, written by United Press International, said the negotiators had discussed space-based anti-missile systems Tuesday in what was described as the first sub-Soviet spokesman insisted that the known as "star wars." talks concerned ways to avoid mili-tarizing space, rather than defen-sive missiles.

When a U.S. official who had briefed reporters about Tuesday's talks was asked about his earlier comments, he denied that the UPI story reflected his original state-

His comment, however, must be interpreted in the light of the diplo-matic ground-rules that impose confidentiality on the talks. The U.S. official, who reporters insist mentioned the space defenses in his briefing, apparently was obliged to backtrack rather than acknowledge that he had slightly violated the confidentiality rule.

The seeming attempt to present publicly the U.S. point of view on the talks was countered by the Soviet reiteration of its own interpretation — a skirmish in public diplo-macy that is likely to be the start of verbal dancing on the head of a pin.

Any breakthrough in negotia-tions is likely to be kept secret while negotiators try to conclude an agreement. Meanwhile, statements and even artful leaks are usually related to political positioning, not to the substance of the

For example, tight secrecy was maintained in 1982 during the probing between U.S. and Soviet negotiators in Geneva about inter-mediate-range nuclear weapons. The so-called "walk in the woods" occurred during those talks, when the chief delegate of each side agreed privately on a formula to put to their governments. The substance of the proposal was leaked

President Ronald Reagan has said that this research program will not be impeded by the Geneva

In the U.S. view, the Geneva talks are a forum to persuade Soviet officials to discuss how such defensive missiles, if they prove feasi-ble, might be phased into service to enhance international stability.

The two governments, anxious to resume the Geneva talks, apparently have agreed to disagree on this point. But the difference is the centerpiece of the propaganda war about space defenses as each side seeks international support for its

In agreeing to the three-tier talks, the Soviet Union said that no result could emerge from any of the subsidiary talks unless agreement is reached

Many diplomats expect the Soviet Union at some point to demand a moratorium on the research and talks are designed to prevent what Soviet spokesmen call an arms race in space—a phrase reference to the continuing the talks.

U.S. officials, anticipating that move, have insisted repeatedly that the United States intends to continue its research on space-based defenses. Thus, any such Soviet move would appear to be an attempt to sabotage the disarmament process. The Reagan administration contends that a moratorium on spaceweapon research would leave the West behind the Soviet Union in this field and could not be verified. Soviet propaganda and diplomacy are trying to mobilize public opinion in Europe and elsewhere to press the Reagan administration to slow its military programs, con-tending that it would improve the climate for the Geneva talks.

Despite the news blackout in Geneva, comments and leaks about the substance of the talks have already started emerging elsewhere. For example, the chief Soviet ne-gotiator, Victor P. Karpov, recently said on Soviet television that U.S. research on space defenses was undermining the Geneva talks. The quarrel over space weapons is a major stumbling block in the negotiations, which cover, in addition to space defenses, interconti-this trap was outsider Alaïa, who showed in his showroom without music or props of any kind.

Kenzo is the most poetic of Paris designers and seems to be perpetually living in a child's world. His whimsical collection included Bavarian folklore, Peruvian peasants and a good dose of fairy-tale characters, including Snow White. The podium was filled with sleighs, mastiffs on leash and page boys courting beautiful damsels under showers

The Bavarian Operetta look included white peasant skirts over colorful petticoats and decorated with multicolored rows of ribbons. Flat peasant boots were edged with fur, heads were wrapped around in big mohair scarves and Russian blouses were tucked into baggy muzhik

As usual, the look was utterly cheerful because of Kenzo's riot of colors, with reds and yellows and hot pinks all thrown in together. When Kenzo showed miniskirts, which he did quite often, he had them over blue or red legs. The look was not only young but virtually junior. Knits, always a strong point part of this show had page boys in bright floral velvets and princesses in crinkly taffetas.

At Alaīa's, the story once again was the body. This designer, who can be held responsible for the curves' revival, went one notch further with clothes that fitted like a second skin. Although Alaia is an outsider - he does not show with the rest of Paris designers — he is considered one of Paris's most influential designers, an accomplished technician and a peerless tailor.

He even made ski pants sexy, with intricate back seams outlining the derrière. This he had already done on sexy little skirts that have been heavily copied. The contrast between these figure-moulding ski pants and bulky white alpaca sweaters made the models look even more vulnerable. Another interesting group was all the tailored jackets, including a gray one, over ski-pants, which was like rein-

Other high points included tailored coats unmatched in Paris, interesting shearling with cloudpatterns over them and reversible mink coats. To Chinese United Press International KUNSAN, South Korea -- Two crew members cried and begged for their lives Thursday as South Ko-rea returned a Chinese torpedo boat and its crew a week after a mutiny caused the vessel to drift into South Korean waters. The radio operator, Du Xinli, 20, and the navigator, Wang Zhon-grong, 19, were handed over to Chinese authorities along with coffins crewmen who died during the mutimy. Also transferred were nine sailors from the torpedo boat who survived the mutiny unhurt and another two who were injured. The two mutineers were confined in a cabin of the torpedo boat as the vessel was towed by a destroyer to the transfer point, in the Yellow Sea, 155 miles (250 kilometers) off the Korean coast. Later, Korean officials said, the two shed tears when they learned that they

Secret Toy Case Fizzles in U.K.

The Associated Press LONDON -- Charges that a senior British civil servant breached the Official Secrets Act were dropped Thursday af-ter a court was told that the documents Alan Lowther leaked to a fellow employee dealt with toy typewriters.

Outside the Old Bailey criminal court, Mr. Lowther, 44, an executive officer in the Home Office, called the case "a disgraceful waste of public money." The prosecutor offered no evidence, acknowledging that the two pages of a confidential report on work given to prisoners were of little value and that the other employee was familiar with their contents.

Mr. Lowther said he hoped the case would be the death knell for the 1911 act's Section 2, which forbids any government employee from disclosing information to anyone unauthorized to receive it. Critics say the section is far too broad.

Six weeks ago, Clive Ponting, a senior official at the Defense Ministry, was cleared of Section 2 charges after admitting that he gave an opposition lawmak-er confidential but not classified documents about the sinking of the Argentine cruiser General Belgrano during the Falklands war.

Iraq Breaks Its Word

What is Iraq's word worth? It is bound by the Geneva protocol prohibiting the use of poisonous gases in war, yet a group of Iranian soldiers is under treatment in European hospitals for the effects of mustard gas. From this and other evidence, U.S. officials conclude that Iraq is once again using chemical weapons, in violation of the treaty it signed in 1931.

When Iran complained of chemical attacks a year ago, a United Nations team detected mustard gas and the nerve gas Tabun on the battlefield. Evidently the use of these outlawed weapons had been long premeditated. Under the guise of making pesticides, Iraq constructed plants for producing toxic gases and imported chemicals from America and Europe.

"Justly condemned by the general opinion of the civilized world" is the Geneva treaty's description of chemical warfare. The United States condemned Iraq's use of the poison in precursor chemicals, as did Europe and Japan. But one dose of the world's obloquy was not enough. Iraq has now invited another.

Both Iraq and Iran have committed many brutalities during four and a half years at war. But brutalities are seldom decisive; their only certain effect is that one leads to another. The two countries are now bombarding each other's cities. Why amid this barbarism worry about chemical weapons? Because any sustainable limit on the barbarism of war is worth keeping. Having tasted chemical weapons in World War I, Europe kept them unused in stockpiles throughout World War II. Chemical weapons can be contained, provided that they never begin to become commonplace and that those who unleash them are forced to count the world's abhorrence in the price of their use. - THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Latin Nonproliferation

Argentina and Brazil are holding talks to open their nuclear facilities to reciprocal visits.

The missions would be an important contribution to peace and to the control of nuclear weapons in the Western Hemisphere.

Both countries have the capability to build nuclear weapons. There have been occasions over the years when each has seemed to be moving in that direction. Both have always denied it, asserting that they wanted nuclear power only for peaceful purposes. But because of a long rivalry between them, evidence of nuclear progress in either country has been grounds for anxiety in the other. Under the military government that collapsed in 1983, Argentina had been showing signs of moving purposefully toward a bomb. Both countries have declined to sign the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty, in protest against provisions that they consider discriminatory, and both have been carrying on nuclear work at sites that are not subject to international inspection under the treaty's safeguard system. That is why it is significant that the initiative has come from Argentina and that the visits would specifically include all of their nuclear sites without exception. Both governments emphasize that the visits would not replace other regional commitments, or the more formal safeguards that already apply to some sites in each country. This agreement holds great promise for reassuring each government of the other's intentions. Perhaps it will not be limited to those two. The journal Nucleonics Week, which first reported these negotiations, says that Uruguay is also ready to join.

These talks would have been highly unlikely under Argentina's previous government. They are one of the many benefits that an elected president, Raul Alfonsin, is bringing to his country - and not to his country alone. Progress toward the agreement has been delayed by the transition in Brazil, but there both the last government and the newly elected one have been firmly in favor of the idea. It is a delicate business to fit together the network of treaties and understandings that try to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons. As long as a few countries have the bomb and most do not, a kind of inequality is inevitably built into the general treaties. That inequality, reserving the weapons for the few, offends a number of governments, including some that have no intention of building them. Where those governments decline to join the nonproliferation treaty, regional agreements can complement it and support its purpose most usefully. When Argentina and Brazil start sending their specialists to take a look at each other's nuclear plants, they will strengthen their own security, their neighbors' and everybody else's. -THE WASHINGTON POST.

Try a 'Share Economy'

These are the best of economic times for most Americans. But what of the eight million who, despite the boom, remain unemployed?

Policy-makers accept 7-percent unemployment as an unavoidable cost of stable prices. They fear that a concerted effort to reduce joblessness would trigger another round of inflation and recession. But in what may be the most important contribution to economic thought since the general theory of John Maynard Keynes, Martin Weitzman, an economist at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, suggests an elegant way to break the link between employment and the business cycle.

He set out his plan in October in a readable little book, called "The Share Economy," that continues to stir restless interest. The core of system of fixed wages to one in which workers' incomes are determined by company performance. Almost everyone would benefit.

Most workers are paid according to contract: so many hours times the hourly rate. If the cost of extra hours is less than the extra revenues the work would yield, the employer hires more people. If workers insist on higher wages or if sales fall, they get laid off.

But suppose that labor, instead of negotiating for so many dollars an hour, negotiated for a share of company revenues. And suppose that the agreement left the employer free to hire as many more workers as he wanted Attitudes toward hiring would be transformed. Imagine that General Motors, for instance, agreed in such negotiations to pay its workers 70 percent of revenues. Since it would keep 30 percent, GM would want to keep hiring as long as the extra workers made a contribution to revenues. Those already employed would in effect pay part of any new workers' wages. If there were then a recession, GM would have a strong incentive to avoid layoffs. Revenues would fall, but pay would remain a fixed percentage of revenue, so the company would gain nothing by idling productive workers.

That sounds great for GM and the workers who would otherwise be unemployed, but what about the rest of GM's workers, whose income would fluctuate according to company revenue and new hiring? Why should they buy the Weitzman idea? One reason is that the pay loss, averaged out among a whole work force, would be small. Another is job security. Most people who work for a living should be willing to take a temporary pay cut to keep fellow workers on the job during a recession.

In good times, if GM hired so many people that wages dropped substantially, the union would be free to bargain for a larger share of the profits, just as it is free now to bargain for higher wages. And if most companies switched to the Weitzman share agreement, the widespread competition for workers would ensure that no company could long get away with sub-par compensation. "The share economy" would superficially resemble the full-employment economy of World War II, when employers had to scavenge for workers - with one big difference. In a war economy the pressure of labor shortages brings higher wages and, ultimately, inflation. In the share economy, employers would always want more employees but they would not have to pay inflationary wages to get them. The link between high employment and inflation would be broken. There is another set of virtues in the idea Government policy-makers would no longer have to accept low growth to avert inflation. Inflation could never become locked into higher wages, so it would not feed on itself through workers' expectations of more inflation.

Could a share economy work? It does. Pay in Japan is in part determined by sales. No other economy has so successfully maintained high employment with low inflation.

There may be undiscovered flaws in Mr. Weitzman's proposition. But if the share economy delivered, think of the triumph. All the efficiency of competition would be retained: Corporate performance would still be rewarded or punished in the market. The distribution of income would not be greatly altered. But prosperity would no longer depend on the misery of the unemployed.

The share economy deserves attention and debate. The idea needs testing for analytic errors, and practical examination to see how business and labor might be encouraged to try it and learn how to manage the transition.

Ideas that promise so much usually succumb to general skepticism. But this is no crackpot scheme — not as long as society rewards work and so many people need it. - THE NEW YORK TIMES.

FROM OUR MARCH 29 PAGES, 75 AND 50 YEARS AGO

1910: Roosevelt Addresses Egyptians CAIRO - Mr. Roosevelt delivered an address at the Egyptian University [on March 28]. After a reference to the president of the university, Prince Found, of whom he spoke in terms of the highest praise, he said that the university holds untold possibilities for the good of the country. Wisdom and sincerity, financial and education management, and above all, character, are more important than mental subtility. No man is educated by a curriculum. Are the people ready, Mr. Roosevelt asked, for selfgovernment with a paper constitution? Selfgovernment is not a matter of a decade or two, but of generations. Every man must fight for himself and remember the Arab proverb. "God is patient if man knows how to wait."

1935: Murder Trial, Guernsey Style GUERNSEY - This island is having its first murder trial in 82 years and the inhabitants are discussing it to the exclusion of all else. The defendant is Mrs. Gertrude de la Mare, who is charged with the murder of her employer, a 76year-old farmer. Guernsey legal procedure is filled with picturesque customs dating back to Norman times. A case is tried before a bailiff. whose function corresponds to that of an English judge. The decision is given by twelve jurats. The honor of serving as a jurat is eagerly sought by every islander. One extraor-dinary feature is that the jurats may not retire behind closed doors, but must conduct their deliberations in public. Each jurat must speak up and give his view of the case.

WASHINGTON —To think seriously about South Africa's racial dilemma is, for me at least, to make a series of false starts to nowhere. The premise is easy enough: that it is wrong for the white minority, whose antecedents are European, to rule the black majority, whose roots are African; that it is particularly wrong that the minority should govern so ruthlessly without any semblance of the consent of the governed; any semblance of the consent of the governed; that it is unacceptable in a world claiming to be civilized that any people should be denied the fundamental rights of citizenship in the land of their birth and heritage.

But since to expect the white Afrikaners to relinquish their awesome power to the black aborigines is no more realistic than expecting white American to hand control of America to the American Indians, the question is: How can this fundamental injustice be remedied?

Two groups of optimists think they know. The rosy-eyed optimists are convinced that the white minority government can, by the prospect of some combination of economic pressure and international embarrassment, be studged in the direction of racial justice.

These idealists include Randall Robinson, head of the Free South African Movement that is leading the daily pickets at the South African Embassy in Washington, and Chester Crocker, architect and defender of the U.S. policy of "constructive engagement." Admittedly, the two would find little on which they could agree. But the fact is that both believe that the U.S. government, through a proper use of its diplomatic and economic influence, could move South Africa toward an acceptable solution. The key difference between them is that Mr. Crocker would use the carrot of warm relations, and Mr. Robinson the stick of economic sanction.

The bloody-eyed optimists would support Mr. Robinson, not because they believe his approach would work directly but because they are persuaded that all-out economic sanctions would hasten the day of all-out civil war, which blacks, by reason of their superior numbers, would win.
I find it hard to follow either scenario to a reasonable outcome. The ruling whites obviously value American investment and American goodwill - but surely not more than they value political and economic control of the land they have ruled for about as long as whites have ruled America. In other words, whether in response to Mr. Crocker's carrot or Mr. Robinson's stick, the South African whites can be expected to do little more than put a prettier face on apartheid.

As for the path of all-out war, it is hard to see how the blacks could win. If the Pretoria government is willing have automatic weapons fired into crowds of black mourners, knowing that the eyes of those whose goodwill they covet are watching, what would they stop at if their very survival was at stake? Is it really credible that the most sophisticated military establishment on the continent would balk at carpet-bombing the black townships if it came to that?

Perhaps the most seductive aspect of the various disinvestment proposals is the fact that white South Africans seem to react positively to them and black South Africans seem to encourage them. Both responses may be misleading. What the black majority seems to favor, and what the white minority seems to react to, is the threat of disinvestment. As with the blackmailer who threatens to reveal some dark secret, the threat is ffective; the actual delivery is worthless.

I have heard the boldness of black South Africans who insist that while the economic ruin that disinvestment and severing of relations with the Western world could bring would hurt them. it would burt the whites more. Blacks are used to suffering they say. But it occurs to me that the effect of disinvestment could be achieved by blacks themselves, simply by voluntarily giving up the jobs that disinvestment would eliminate. I find it instructive that no call for a general work stoppage has ever had much success there.

It is perfectly obvious what is wrong in South Africa. It is equally obvious what a just outcome would look like. What I find impossible to see is: How do you get from here to there?

IBM Will Stay Put and Keep Practicing Equality

By John F. Akers

ARMONK, New York — The debate over whether American companies should do business in South Africa has taken on new urgency. This is fueled by South Africa's continued resistance to all but the most limited reforms of apart-heid and the continued suffering of blacks and other nonwhites. Some individuals say that American firms in South Africa must now oppose apartheid more directly and publicly; others are pressing them to withdraw fully. As a result, the International Business Machines Corporation has again re-examined its practice of doing business in South Africa. We have concluded that we should remain there.

Like most American firms in South Africa, IBM practices nondiscrimination and gives equal pay for equal work. IBM South Africa continues to increase its employment of blacks, including managers, and blacks work in all major areas — sales, service, etc. — iñ a non-segregated environment. IBM, complying fully with U.S. export regulations, does not sell its products to the police, prisons, military, national-security agencies and the department that administers the passbook system for blacks.

The writer is president and chief executive officer of IBM. We work to improve black education. Our largest project contributes video recorders and lessons, and workbooks in science and math, to 35 high schools in Soweto and three black teacher-training colleges.

For some critics, however, the conduct of American companies in South Africa is not the issue. They argue that only a small percentage of nonwhites have jobs with American firms, and that whatever benefits those nonwhites receive cannot outweigh the need to take a symbolic stand against racism by withdrawing completely.

I believe that people who hold this view tend to overestimate the economic and political impact that such action would have on the government. Moreover, they often underestimate how economic activity can generate social change.

Business people are not social reformers in disguise; but economic activity does have profound social effects, direct and indirect, that enhance the climate for change.

For example, any business community needs well educated employees, and all businesses want the largest number of customers possi-ble. Both considerations give business a strong interest in opposing government policies that limit hu-man potential and restrict freedom. It is no accident that pressure against apartheid in South Africa's white community often comes from the white business community.

Do American companies really challenge discrimination head-on? Here is what Jack F. Clarke, managing director of IBM South Africa. himself a South African, recently said in a speech there: "The laws affecting the right of a person to sell his labor must be abolished ... Laws which force a person working in a First World environment at the office to return to the deprivations of a Third World climate at night must be changed." Mr. Clarke also called for "bringing blacks into the constitutional framework." He spoke not as a political activist but as a businessman who knows that opportunities for growth are limited by laws that deprive people of basic rights. He is thus a powerful voice for change but not if he is not there. IBM could depart with very little financial sacrifice. IBM South Africa generates less than I percent of IBM's worldwide revenues. But we believe the right thing to do is to remain and redouble our efforts to advance social equality. IBM urges other companies to do the same many already are. Pressure on apartheid will be increased by more corporate involvement, not less.

All companies doing business in South Africa should honor the principles set forth and recently ampli-fied by the Reverend Leon Sullivan of Philadelphia calling for business actively to work for change. Only a truly international corporate effort can make a difference.

Corporations have a choice. We can view South Africa as a tragedy, wash our hands of it and wait for the explosion that may or may not come, regardless of what we do. Or we can do business in a stay flat-provides a model for a society in which black, white, Asian and "colored" might some day enjoy peace and freedom. This may be an impossible dream, but I am not ready to give up on it.

A Case for 'Iron Fist': Israel Is Entitled to Security

N EW YORK — Israel's "iron fist" policy in southern Lebanon—responding to terrorist attacks against its military personnel with large-scale shelling, mass arrests and the razing of houses — is arousing considerable moral indignation in America and Western Europe, even among Israel's friends. Since Israeli military sources have suggested that the "iron fist" may soon look like a "velvet glove" compared to what is in store if terrorism in and from Lebanon continues or heightens, a second look at what is actually happening on the ground would seem in order. Israel has a dual goal in Lebanon: to withdraw its military in an orderly fashion (although it does not intend to have the pace of the pullback dictated by terror) and to secure its northern border. This second con-cern — to protect the Galilee region, home to 10 percent of the country's population, from Karyusha rocket attacks and other shelling from Leba-non — was the principal aim of the Israeli invasion in 1982. In the three years since, Jerusalem has abandoned the political aspira-tion that attended that undertaking: the installation of a "friendly,' pro-Western government in Beirut. That, it seems, was simply not to be. Israel is now focused on far more limited, security-related concerns. Because of this, the "tron fist" policy has overwhelming public support in Israel.

It should not be hard to underBy Eric M. Breindel

Americans, in particular, should understand that the fury of the Lebaington to respond if the northern tier nese Shiites goes well beyond simple resentment of Israel.

Ottawa and the Canadian provincial its bases caused the people of Galilee governments proved fruitless, surely Americans would wish the U.S. military to take whatever steps necessary to render the endangered cities, and the lives of the people who dwell in them, free from fear and violence.

Israel's critics have noted with iromy that Israeli soldiers are being attacked by Shiites — the very people who so warmly welcomed them on their arrival in 1982. What does this signify? True, the Israelis are now less popular than they were among cer-tain radicalized factions of southern Lebanese. People everywhere tend to resent living under alien rule. But the terrorism on the rise now may have at least as much to do with Lebanese domestic politics, Libyan aid and Khomeini ideological inspiration as with the Israeli occupation. The Israelis are withdrawing, after to spend much time in underground shelters, it was not uncommon to hear military officials, including the late Defense Minister Moshe Dayan, speak of the possibility — if all else failed — of rendering "Fatahland" uninhabitable. Similarly drastic notions are again heard among Israelis in government and the military. Critics ask what could justify such extreme measures. Last week a suicide car-bomb assault killed 12 Israesoldiers and wounded 14 others. Israelis responded with an attack against the Shiite village of Zrariyah - not, it was emphasized, in reprisal, but because intelligence had established that the town had become a terrorist base. Vast quantities of arms and ammunition were recovered. No less than 34 Shiite guerrillas were killed in the gun battle and more than 100 men were taken away for questioning — from one small village.

Shiite groups throughout the region now stage some 70 attacks a week on the withdrawing Israelis.

Is the "iron fist" approach a moral or even tactical wrong? It is difficult to imagine how the aspiration to withdraw an occupying army peace-fully, or to enjoy a secure frontier, can be deemed illegimmate.

Straightforward announcements -warnings, if you will -have been issued from Jerusalem time and again, making clear to the Lebanese that Israel now wants nothing more than security in the north. The search for political accommodation is over, the goal today is simply freedom from assault. Must Israel once again be judged by a moral standard so uniquely harsh that it does not even include the right of self-defense?

'Let's Have A Summit, -Please'

By William Safire

S AN DIEGO — In a startling flip-flop. President Reagan sent Vice President George Bush to the latest Kremlin funeral with a written invi-tation to Mikhail Gorbachev to a get-acquainted summit meeting.

Never mind all the past statements about the need to prepare summing sessions with care lest the publicity lead the world to unrealistic expecta-lead the world to infreaustic expecta-tions. Forget all previous disparage-ment of phony "atmospherics."

To underscore his eagerness for a handshake conference, Mr. Reagan made public his invitation to the joint global photo opportunity. First Secretary Gorbachev said nothing.

Turning the other cheek, the rebuffed president told a press conference that protocol called for the next support massing to take place in the ence that protocol called for the next summit meeting to take place in the United States, and again put on the public pressure. More silence from the Soviet Union's cagey new leader.

This week Mr. Reagan fairly got down on his knees. Admitting that there have been no simple of the "there have been no signals" of acceptance, he pleaded through reporters with the hard-to-get Russian. The date "depends on Gorbachev... when it could be convenient for him."

Why. Mr. Gorbachev would not even have to make a special trip. "In times past," offered the president. rolling to a supine fallback position,
"the head of state of the Soviet Union has come to the opening of the United Nations. If that is convenient for him, I certainly wouldn't see any rea-son why that wouldn't be for us." In other words, if Mr. Gorbachev will not come to Washington on a state visit, Mr. Reagan is hoping to be squeezed into the Soviet leader's busy schedule at the United Nations in

New York this fall, perhaps between the Cuban and Nicaraguan leaders. Why all this uncharacteristic begging for the pleasure of another superpower's company? Mr. Reagan's urge to hold hands has led to a significant weakening of his position on Russian violations of past arms agreements: What used to be his pointed objections to the placement of battle-management radar and the encryption of missile telemetry that mocks the ABM treaty has, overnight, become mere "language problems between our two countries."

The killing of a U.S. army major, coldly justified by the Kremlin in its jet-shootdown mode, does not cool the suitor's ardor for a summit session. "It would make me more anxious to go to one." Mr. Reagan said. Mr. Reagan is not the first leader to adopt the notion that basic differences in interests could be overcome by the warmth of human understandby the warmin of munan understanding. When Winston Churchill first called for a "parley at the summit" in 1950, he distanced a meeting "over-being by a ponderous, ugat assistance and officials drawn up in vast, cumbrous array." John Kennedy in 1959, before he learned better, won the hearts of the hopeful by saying, "It is far better that we meet As we celebrate the 40th anniversary of Yalta, our palpitating sherpas should fecall certain summit lessons: The meeting should be for the sake of the subject, not vice versa. Things like treaties with regards to fishing rights ... offers Mr. Reagan plaintively, "various commercial", things ... these could be helped along possibly by a summit." This sort of treaty-entreating makes the president a diplomatic mendicant • An unstructured get-together nourishes the wrongheaded notion that the real differences between the two powers are rooted only in mismderstandings. The real trouble is not lack of communication, it is the Soviet desire to dominate. Only negotiations beforehand can prevent mistakes. When a chief of state or head of government makes a fumble," wrote Dean Acheson, "the goal line is open behind him."

 The side that presses for a meeting weakens its position. When President Nixon mined Haiphong harbor before the 1972 summit conference, he showed his willingness to forgo the meeting in Moscow, the Russians showed that they wanted detente more, and Mr. Nixon went in with the psychological upper hand. Later, during Watergate, it was Mr. Nixon who needed summit talks, and the advantage was with the Soviets. The side that shows it wants the meeting more suffers for its political needs. At this moment it is Mr. Gorba chev, not Mr. Reagan, who needs added legitimacy. The U.S. leader, by begging for a meeting anywhere, any-time, demeans his office and undercuts his negotiating position:

If, during the next decade, the Russians have reason to believe that the United States is forging ahead to-ward its goal of placing defensive weapons in space, how can they be expected to agree to a reduction in offensive weapons? They will have to prepare for the worst: a unilateral breakthrough by the United States. Mr. Nitze does not discuss this peril. If it is true that the United States would like to have a radical reduction in offensive weapons, the way to get it is to invite the Soviet Union to participate in U.S. research on defensive weapons. The Russians would be expected to accord the same right to raw material into high-cost finished U.S. researchers. The British and the French might be brought in on the same terms. A joint international effort of this kind would assemble a richer combination of brains and experience than any single nation could. And all parties could rest assured that no one would be gaining a unilateral advantage.

Without such an invitation, few will believe (and certainly not the Russians) that the United States has no sinister objective in hastening its "star wars" research. J.P. MORRAY.

Outbid the Crooks The United States has invested much money and effort in combating drug production in South America and Mexico. Could it not use the money to buy the crops from the peasants, offering higher prices than the drug dealers and then simply destroying the crops? Why wait until products and enormous amounts of cash are involved? At least this solution would raise the standard of living of Latin American farmers, at present in dire need of aid. Some may question the act of a government purchasing a crop and then destroying it, but has not the same government paid farmers not to plant?

One feature is common to self-declared political plays: In them propaganda and literature are inextricably mixed. Such plays may indeed be on the wane in the U.S. may indeed be on the wane in the U.S. theater today, but that doesn't mean that politics has disappeared from the theater. There is a kind of theater where politics still plays an essential part, although it is embedded below the surface — or is implicit in the cultural or social commentary of the plays. Much of what we take for granted about our matters are harmal learned is implied with culture, we have learned, is imbued with political assumptions and values. As Richard Gilman writes in his introduction to "New Plays USA 2": "Political . . . has to do with the organization of life, the communal area of values." In plays which suggest a political vision in this indirect way, the message is no longer in the text, but in the

One of the great modern masters of the dramatized subtext is Anton Chekhov, the creator of the non-event tragicomedy, a genre which foreshadowed our mid-century metaphysical forces. In Chekhov's mood plays action is replaced by rippling under-currents and the key episodes of the protagonists' lives occur somewhere offstage.

Chekhov grew up with the conviction that the way to freedom lay in "squeezing the slave out of oneself, drop by drop." But he never belonged to a political party, nor re-vealed radical learnings. He thought of himself as a chronicler of society, but refused to draw ideological conclusions. By now, from the distance of time, it has become clear that his plays portray more than the stasis of individual characters — that they evoke, through those characters, a condition of the larger society — the inertia that pervaded Russia under the rigid autocracy of Alexander III when censorship squelched civic initiative and life become hopelessly stagnant. Watching "The Cherry Orchard" or "Three Sisters" requires of the audience a new way of listening. In these dramas, there is power-

From the perspective of a few decades, we can see the plight of Willy Loman in "Death of a Salesman" as revealing the conditions of this America — its ruthlessness, its merciless individualism, its lack of humane values. As we get closer to our own time, and the political structures in which we live become less clear, the larger patterns can become obscured by the particular drama enacted before us. But that is the effort required by many recent plays, as contemporary American writers, particularly those who belong to the post-Vietnam War generation, have be-gun to acquire mastery of the subtext and the

The same can be said of a contemporary playwright who has often erroneously been called apolitical, Samuel Beckett, In many of his plays, the political significance, indeed, has to be inferred from the overt content. But in others, it is more evident. For exam-ple, in his short one act play "Catastrophe,"

In the works of many younger dramatists, America is portrayed as a strange country, mad and violent, greedy for material gains, and metaphysically blind. In Sam Shepard's "True West," Austin, the Abel turned Cain by his wicked brother's disquieting, destructive presence, proceeds to strangle that brother with the cord of a ripped-out telephone. The "whole outdoors" is the vast contiquires mythic proportions. Once these open spaces were traversed by explorers, pioneers prospectors, and settled by ranchers and farmers. Now, these noble American icons have been replaced by pitiful caricatures: ne'er-do-wells, small-time thieves, impoverished cowboys. Adventure, glamour, money have moved from the land to the corporate offices and Hollywood studios. Because there is nothing concrete to grapple with any longer, Shepard's protagonists - brothers ("True West"), brother/sister lovers ("Fool for Love") — duel with one another.

May's question to Eddie in "Fool for Love" hangs in the air, unanswered yet pregnant with the deepest meaning: "Why is everything a big contest for you?" It is the question American playwrights are asking of America, and the contest becomes a metaphor of the American condition - the politics independent of parties of elections.

The contest is one of the prevailing images on the American stage. It has to do with the "American dream" of success. Tragicomical in John Guare's "House of Blue Leaves,"

|Analyzing the Roles That Vie for Oscars

By Aljean Harmetz

OS ANGELES - What kinds of performances win Oscar nominations? Is the film, the role, or the acting most important? Do the actors and actresses feel passionately about the characters they portrayed? And do they secretly expect nominations?

When the envelopes were torn open at the Academy Award ceremonies Monday night, the choices ranged from depictions of Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart to a reporter for The New York Times, from a rich Bostonian lady to three women struggling to keep their farms. During the weeks before the Oscar ceremonies, all five of the women nominated for best actress — Sally Field, who won, Judy Davis, Jessica Lange, Sissy Spacek and Vanessa Redgrave — and four of the men nominated for best actor — F. Murray Abraham, the winner, Jeff Bridges, Tom Hulce and Sam Waterston - shared their feelings about the characters and movies for which they were nominated. Albert Finney, who was unreachable, is quoted from an interview he gave the author in Chernavaca, Mexico, in the summer of 1983 when he was filming "Under the Volcano."

Sally Field (for her role as Edna Spalding, a farmer's widow in "Places in the Heart."): "In my case, it wasn't just Edna. The script of 'Places in the Heart' is so well done that it brings more attention to the role. Edna is such a complex character that she gives the actor a lot to do. Edna has to step outside her own limitations to conquer the things that happen to her.

"Without wanting to sound overly modest, I think the winning is getting the nomination. I said the same thing when I won with Norma Rae, who, like Edna, had to adjust to changing circumstances. When it gets down to five actors, it's the role that wins the award. Put Sissy Spacek or Jessica Lange in the role of Edna Spaulding, and they'd have gotten nominations. However wonderful Jessica was in 'Country,' that role would have been good to another actress thought Mae Garvey was very conventional and unliberated in her role of wife, mother, center of the family. As a child, I would always talk about 'My Career.' My mother would say, 'I've had a career,' and I'd think, 'Oh, mother, having a family isn't a career.' I spent my first six years trying to kiss my amount of money. Socially, there were enor-elbow because some relative had told me mous pressures to give in. They were proud that if I kissed my elbow I'd turn into a boy. I had to wear jeans with elastic instead of in a milieu that treated them with scorn. zippers because I was a girl. I couldn't take my shirt off because I was a girl.

"I always thought of my father, who's a very strong man, as a Rock of Gibraltar. Four years ago my mother died and everyone realized she was the strength in the family. Not until I lost my mother and had a child did I understand the postion in life that women hold. My mother died the day after I found out I was pregnant. I had always been the child. Six months before, I would have felt, What? Me have a baby? But I felt totally prepared. It was like a relay race passing a baton. I think of my grandmother, my great grandmother, my daughter, my granddaughters. Mae Garvey was a very silent, loving woman who didn't need to take credit for being strong. That's why the role so attracted me."

F. Murray Abraham (for his role as Salieri, the envious court composer in "Amadeus"): "There are certain areas I won't psychoanalyze. Part of acting is a mystery. Examining it is treading on forbidden territory. You know how much in demand this role was. The director Milos Forman saw 1,000 peoagainst the stars who wanted the role, and I got it because Milos wanted someone who would be identified with Salieri and not with any previous roles.

"Milos has a voracious appetite for life and he shakes a film like a bull. He can't abide an unreal moment. He'll cut you cold and make you start again. That was a godsend to me. Milos has an eye you can trust and that allows you to relax. If you don't trust your director, you direct yourself and your performance is self-conscious."

Tora Hulce (for his role as Mozart in Amadeus"): For starters, it's a fabulously written character. Peter Shaffer gave flesh-andblood life to someone we only know as a defiled, angelic creature of exquisite music The particular challenge to me was to take as many risks as I could imagine and not shy away from the controversial aspect of Mozart's life. The fact that my performance was critically controversial can be attributed to the risks I took. Some of the negative critical reaction made me angry because it was as though the critics were seeing me in "Animal House." They didn't understand there was a choice being made. It would have been easier to play something as literate as Peter's script with an English accent and to present a much more conventional picture of an artist. It's wonderful to have made the dangerous choice rather than the safe choice and to be

Judy Davis (for her role as Adela Quested, a young English girl forever changed by India in "A Passage to India"):

'I don't know what on earth makes Americans nominate performances. I was surprised by my nomination. I wouldn't have thought my character was in enough of the film to be nominated. Peggy Ashcroft, Victor Banerjee and James Fox get major scenes where they are set up. My character is not even in much of the early part of the movie. It sounds like we all should say why we should win the Oscar. Vanessa Redgrave is one of my favorite people, and I could find a better reason for her to win than for me."

Vanessa Redgrave (for her role as Olive Chancellor, the repressed spinster feminist at the heart of "The Bostonians"):

"The River"):

"I feel that all I've done is play the lady
"At one time in my life I would have Henry James wrote about, a lady who really existed. My own bluestocking spinster great cousin was one of the first women undergraduates admitted to college in London. Girls of a certain background were treated with contempt if they tried to do anything with their lives except marry for the right women who were ridiculed, who were living Henry James wrote with an intense attraction and intense revulsion toward all those women. I don't share James's cynicism about those women, but none of us tried to change what James wrote. The one really basic danger for all of us actors is to try to make the characters we play as we would like them to be and not as they really are. Every woman would like to be courageous and not to be jealous or have ignoble petty feelings, but James traces in Olive the pettiness all of us would like to avoid portraying and I try scrupulously to show characters in all their unlikable moments."

Albert Finney (for his role as Geoffrey Firmin, a former British consul whose drinking is now his only vocation in "Under the Volcano"):

Whenever I read a script I like, I think it will be so easy. It never is. He was a man who was suddenly very drunk, like someone un-der sodium pentothol and it had to be done straight, soggy straight with no dramatics. It was a very elusive thing to catch. And I've never been as witty as Geoffrey Firmin or as capable of feeling deep pain. I feel shallow Continued on page 9 ple. I read once and I got it. "I don't regard that as a trick. As an actor, you use anything you can. When I was doing Hamlet at the National Theater in 1975, my father died after the second preview. The next night all that stuff about Hamlet's father became, for two previews, impossible to say without weeping. After that, one started — as an actor — to use it."

French Revival for Thermal Purgatory

ARIS — The French like to sit in water and to sail across it. They are not keen on drinking it, possibly because for so long water was assoted with penitential cures at spas, "a re-Esal for purgatory," as Madame de Séviwrote from Vichy.

The cures have become less drastic in the 150 years and, since World War II theralisme, as the French call it, has steadily ogressed, with the number of curistes alet doubling in the last 10 years. The spur has been the French Securité ciale, or national health system, which imburses recognized cures on the basis of a aple letter from the curiste's physician.

Recent increases mean that some curistes will be reimbursed not only for the cost of the cure but also for most of their travel and hotel expenses. Since French companies usually consider cures as sick leave, an employee can still take the five-week summer holiday as well. "Of course very few people stoop to such behavior," says a representative of the Sydicat National des Etablissements Thermanx. Of course.

Until recently applications had to be sent to the Securité Sociale by April 1 and so there was a flurry of activity and advertising from competing spas in February and March. Even without the deadline, this is still the time when interest in watering places is at its height: Many are just reopening after the winter hiatus and those few people who want to finagle a free pre-vacation in order to get in form for the real summer vacation go shopping for the right place.

an exhibition on French watering places, which has just closed, and a few weeks ago there was a display at a huge exhibition center at which various spas did their best to attract the general public with brochures, andiovisuals and a computer that recom mended a spa when informed of the subject's means, maladies, favorite sports and preferred scenery. The event was not attended by the Syndicat National des Etablissements Thermanx. "Our interests are medical," said a representative. "We don't care about people who are planning their vacations." France has more than 100 watering places which divide among them most human ailments. While such old-fashioned afflictions as gout are rarely mentioned these days, goahead spas now include treatment for the diseases of modern life. Divonne-les-Bains offers a view of tranquil Switzerland and treats insomnia, anxiety and overwork, while Ussat-les-Bains has a climate and vegetation that are described as sedative and now specializes in le stress as well as asthenia and gynecology. The handsome exhibition mounted by the Institut Français d'Architecture included a study of spa iconography and a historical resume of architectural styles (including neo-Byzantine and neo-Egyptian) right to today. Missing in the chronological survey was World War II, when the French government took a four-year cure at Vichy.

ICHY is the grandest of all, with 12 natural springs and cures for the liver and kidneys. Alphabetically, French watering places range from Aix-en-Provence (rheumanism, veins) to Vittel (liver, nutri-tion, kidneys). There is also the redundant Bains-les-Bains (heart) and little Merkwiller-Pechelbronn, near the German border, whose chief distraction is its oil museum.

Lamartine is said to have written part of his mournful poem "Le Lac" while gazing from his window at Aix-les-Bains (rheuma-tism), a watering place also visited by Balzac, J. P. Morgan and Verlaine.

There is no French watering place with the beauty or literary associations of Bath in England. This may be because French spas are connected with a strictly administered medical core and despite the luxury, life there was often deadly dull.

"All watering places are the same - bars that dispense water, bathtubs, eternal ballrooms," Flaubert wrote, a statement corroborated in "Maigret à Vichy," where Georges Simenon writes, "They could have sworn they'd been in Vichy all eternity, while in fact it was only their fifth day."

These days there is an urgent attempt to brighten up spa life and to attract more visitors (in 1984 there were 600,000 curister). Vittel now emphasizes nonthermal attractions such as riding and jogging and tennis. while the Club Mediterrance has set up its

to its usual round of distractions a health program called passeport pour la forme. The casino with adjoining theater is a classic diversion, and since World War II, some spas have gone in for music festivals, among them Aix-en-Provence, Divonne and Evian. If the baleful craze for clean living that has struck France has helped revitalize old watering places, it has been more useful in promoting newer cures, such as thalassotherapy, which is based on sea, rather than spring, water cures and offers two advantages: a seaside setting and the fact that the health-giving waters need not be drunk.

Thalassotherapy tends to be aimed at such own pleasure domes in Vittel and has added

modern ailments as le stress and to offer as diversions courses in computer science which might attract the diligent rising executive. A main part of the cure is seawater baths, to which seaweed is often added. giving the mixture the color and odor of a tubful of commercial travelers' dirty socks.

While old-style watering places used to offer punishing cures redeemed by eightcourse meals and lavish entertainments, thalassotherapy emphasizes relaxation and starvation. Not every seawater cure includes a strict diet, but the better ones do, the finest and most fashionable being Quiberon, in Brittany, where the Hotel Dietetique lives up to its name with elegantly presented meals that add up to only 800 calories a day.

"It's really not very much," one steady customer says. "Just enough to keep us from

ARIS — The spring crop of new Michelin one-star restaurants — the city gained 12 — offers no stunning surprises, but there is no doubt that non-French restaurants are finally getting some establishment recognition and that the French are increasingly attracted to restaurants devoted almost exclusively to fish and shellfish.

Gastronomically, the most interesting and noteworthy of the new stars fits into neither category. It is Manoir de Paris, the 17th Arrondissement sister restaurant of the La Ferme Saint-Simon, a restaurant in the 7th Arrondissement of which I've never been terribly fond.

But the food at Manoir de Paris is wonderful, and although one might at this stage call it a junior Jamin (the chef, Philippe Groult, was Joël Robuchon's assistant for 10 years) there are plenty of light, refreshing and appealing offerings to make this place worth a visit, Open since September in premises previously occupied by the Grand Veneur, the restaurant still has that rather overbearing and heavy decor, but there is a warming fireplace, and the service is attractive and extremely professional.

Those familiar with Robuchon's cooking will recognize it immediately: the same simplified but elegant presentation, the same sprin-kling of truffles over just about everything, the same tiny cubes of vegetable, even many frankly derivative dishes. The two chefs share many of the same suppliers, so chances are the ingredients that go into your meal at the Manoir will be about the finest to be found. Jamin it's not — many of the flavors are undeveloped and show a lack of sophistication - but it will be interesting to follow Groult's development.

Some of the best dishes to sample here include the queues de crevettes en marinière safranée, prepared with fresh, not frozen, little shrimp bathed in a delicate sance barely hinting of saffron; a supersimple grilled daurade served with an oursin (sea urchin) sauce alongside, and a little casserole of scallops, wild pleurotte musinooms and langoustines in a snail-butter sauce, a rich and lovely marriage of land and sea. There is also a wonderful salt-cod dish that, unfortunately, was marred by the overpowering cubes of green pepper that are part of the garnish.

The wine list is quite good, and one won't be disappointed with

T came as a pleasant surprise to see Michelin finally "discover" Tan Dinh, the Vietnamese restaurant that is perhaps the bestknown place of its kind in Paris. Of course its popularity is no accident. Tan Dinh is conveniently situated in the 7th Arrondissement, the welcome there could not be warmer, and the fresh, original, bright cuisine serves as a perfect foil to the daily French diet. What's more, Tan Dinh is open on Saturday night, when the city's choice of restaurants is slim indeed.

There's almost no need to recommend specific dishes, for the convivial Robert Vifian will lead you through the menn, composing a meal that not only suits the palate of each diner, but the size of their appetites as well. The restaurant is justifiably renowned for its wine t (the list of Bordeaux, especially Pomerols, is extensive), and there is a very drinkable selection of less expensive wines, many priced at around 75 francs a bottle.

A recent dinner there was memorably satisfying, highlighted by the original ravioli filled with snippets of smooth-flavored smoked goose breast, a great pasta dish peppered with a spicy shrimp sauce and a superb assortment of fried spring rolls. Château Magence, a distinctive white Graves, is a perfect match for this lovely food. Vifian notes that the menu will soon undergo some changes, offering

The Fly in the U.S. Wine Boom | Description | Description

EW YORK - A few years back, serious observers of the U.S. cultural scene hailed what they percrived as a new social phenomenon: the widespread acceptance of wine as a part of the way of life. America, we were told, was becoming a wine-drinking nation.
Those were heady days. Between 1960 and 1980, the consumption of table wine — the kind usually drunk with meals - increased more than sixfold. Between 1975 and 1983, the golden years of the wine boom, total wine consumption in the United States went from 368 million gallons to 529 million gallons. New wineries seemed to open every other day, wine clubs proliferated, and wine books tumbled off the presses.

Then, suddenly, the emphoria was gone. Wine consumption continued to increase, but the rate slowed to a snail's pace. Two recessions, in 1980 and 1981 and '82, took their toll; so did a heightened concern over health, fitness and driving while intoxicated.

But these were not the only reasons for the tapering off of the wine boom. More important, perhaps, was what appears now to have been a basic misunderstanding of the wine market. Wine drinking in the traditional way, with meals, was apparently not what it was all about in the first place. A lot of the wine involved - and this is still the case can be considered wine only by a genuine effort of the will. The fact is that serious, traditional wine drinking — and by that I mean good red wine — has been on the decline in this country for at least five years. and this in spite of tumbling prices both for domestic wines and and imports.

Fine table wines, wines with elegance and preeding and complexity, are almost always red. As with great music or literature, it takes effort and patience to learn to appreciate them. But even simple red wines are more of a challenge than similar whites. They have body and tannin, and they are probably dry. which means not sweet. In other words, they, too, take a little getting used to.

In its annual American Wine Market Review and Forecast for 1984, Impact, a wine and spirits industry newsletter, expressed it succinctly: "The numbers from 1983," it reported, "once more refuted the claims that an increasingly sophisticated American wine-consuming public would soon turn back to red table wine." If white wine was excluded from the table-wine category, Im-

Based on these figures, and on interviews with wine-industry leaders and restaurateurs. I would venture to say that the reports of U.S. wine acculturation were not only premature, they were mostly groundless. I would suggest further that the United States has never been and is not now a winedrinking nation and that the jury is still out on whether it ever will be.

One of the first signs that gave credence to the idea of transformation into a country of wine drinkers was the dramatic switch from dessert wine to table wine in the 1960s and 70s. Domestic sherry and port, which had once been the staples of the American wine market, dropped off the charts, as they say, during the years when wine was becoming fashionable with the middle class.

The inevitable conclusion? America had switched to table wines. But what do we mean by table wine? Basically, it is still wine not bubbly or fortified with additional alcohol. It has 12 percent alcohol by volume, more or less, and meant to be consumed with food. If we were consuming it all with food, the wine-drinking-nation theory might stand up. But most of the table wine is white, and white wine in the United States is more a liquor substitute than a companion to food. U. S. consumption of white wine is three times that of red, and anyone who has been around people who drink wine knows that the most white wine is drunk as an aperitif.

NDUSTRY leaders persist in the theory that white wine is a preliminary to the . main bout, a kind of pons asinorum that intelligent drinkers will cross one day to the world of sophisticated red-wine drinking.

Perhaps, but when does the changeover begin? In 1970, again using Impact figures, Americans drank just over half a gallon of wine per adult, and all but a glass or two of it was red. Five years later, red wine still held 44 percent of the table-wine market, to 32 percent for white. But that was the last time they saw each other. By 1983, 61 percent of the wine Americans drank was white.

In France and Italy, the figures are less dramatic but reversed nonetheless. In Italy in 1983, production of the top-quality appel lation wines amounted to about 145 million gallons of red and just under 79 million gallons of white. In France the same year some 269 million gallous of appellation red wines were made and about 185 mill gallons of white. In a 1980 survey, 86 perc of the French people polled said they i ferred red wine with their meals and only percent opted for white.

Robert Mondavi, the California wine blames the wine industry for turning And cans away from red wine. "In the pane said recently, "we all made our red wines big, too strong to go with food." As a re Mondavi contends, Americans turned lighter whites and roses. He believes that industry is now on the right track an producing lighter, more elegant reds that appeal to the American taste.

Surprisingly, most serious wine don't are unaware of just how unimportant wines are in the American wine scene or it hard to believe that most U. S. wine dis ers have not the slightest interest in red . - or any serious table wine; that they their wine sweet and cold, regardless of color, and that in many cases, it never on to them to combine wine with their mea

One dissenter, and a powerful one, is E.&J. Gallo Winery in Modesto, Califor Gallo Chablis Blanc is the largest sel white wine in the United States, and G Hearty Burgundy is the largest-selling wine. "We find that our wines are drun aperitifs and then carried over to the dir table," a Gallo spokesman said.

Even so, the long-awaited crossover to wine remains as much a symbol as it hoped-for reality. It symbolizes the sw from wine as a social drink to wine as a of meals. And, as Impact's figures show just hasn't happened.

Just as we have misconstrued the role white wine in thinking of it as a table w we have also misinterpreted the role of. so-called "pop" wines in our culture. Is really wine drinking? Pop wine products mostly cold, alcoholic drinks that use win a base, and they are usually faddish, set enormous quantities for a few years and t sinking back into obscurity.

In a sense, the American love affair v. white wine and the popularity of pop w are the same thing. Americans like t drinks cold, simple and sweet. And even so-called dry whites almost always have touch of sugar. "Americans," said Al Lichine, "are born with refrigerators in t

S. residents who are not so exposed to the sharp increases in fares and reduced schedules on shorter, less-traveled domestic routes within the United States. A major flaw of this kind of quantitative survey is that forced-choice questions do not evoke consumer motivations. However, dis-enchantment and confusion about deregulation could stem from breakdowns in agreements between carriers, whereby tickets are honored and baggage is automatically transferred between competitors' flights. This was the case last July when American Airlines ended its agreement with Continental Per-haps some kind of self-regulatory mecha-nism needs to replace the now defunct CAB in protecting consumer interests.

According to Hans Krakauer, senior vice president of IAPA, the lesson to learn from the U.S. experience is how not to go about deregulation in other parts of the world. "Since 1977, we have cautioned against such an abrupt move to deregulation. What we advocate is a gradual liberalization of fares and free entry of new carriers into air routes." Krakaner says that IAPA is preparing a survey among its British members to explore the effects of the recent deregulation explore the effects of the recent designation experiment in Britain, a project it hopes will enhance its credibility with its members, airlines and government agencies. IAPA is currently cooperating with the Aéroports de Paris in a survey of 5,000 of its members to find out what facilities would be needed for a business center on the Heathrow pattern. Surveys like these are one way for members to articulate their needs and are good public relations if they are conducted properly. IAPA as an unabashedly profit-making organization is possibly unique as a consum-er adovacy group. It claims to have more than 100,000 members throughout the world and makes its money by subscriptions linked to travel-related insurance schemes. It has picked up some flack because of this, but there seems to be no reason why the profit motive is necessarily inimical to effective consumer representation. Members are offered a free-luggage retrieval service, lounges at a few airports, discounts on hotels, car rentals and other travel services. They also get help with individual complaints. According to IAPA, most of its members are frequent travelers with high incomes, clustered in the 35-55 age bracket and either individual entrepreneurs or executives working in a small corporate environment.

According to Krakaner, IAPA is closely involved with several airline safety issues in the North America, such as life-vest specifications, smoke detectors, flammability standards for materials, as well as the treatment of children and handicapped passengers.

In Europe, the association is discussing the problem of denied boarding compensation (bumping) with several airlines under the auspices of the Air Transport Committee of the International Chamber of Commerce. But a major ambition of IAPA is to become a recognized negotiating partner with the International Air Travel Association (IATA). IAPA, Krakauer contends, is the only international organization with a broad enough consumer constituency to match that of IATA for commercial carriers. "We want to have a voice in some of the basic principles of tariff setting," he says.

Krakauer has high hopes for a meeting he will attend in Geneva on April 10, to which IATA has invited, at which seven organizations representing airline passengers' interests are to decide the broad issues of European air transport for further discussion.

However, some insiders are skeptical that this meeting will prove to be much more than a public relations exercise on the part of IATA and its member airlines, who need to be seen to be sympathetic to passengers' views. And little chance is seen that any consumer group will have a real part to play in the core issues such as deregulation.

Bahia: Brazil With an African Soul

by Marlise Simons

AHIA, Brazil — She sits radiant on a bluff by the sea, painted in pastel colors, dressed in white lace, holding fruit, spices and lean children. Kipling called her "the hearth of all that flaming energy when Brazil was being born." If Brazil has a mother, Bahia is her name.

Situated on the edge of the New World, on a wide-mouthed bay full of history and myths, Babia is the place where immigrants, traders, dreams and capital entered Brazil. Gold and diamonds, dyewoods and skins were dispatched from here for Portugal.

The slave fleet that crossed the Atlantic for three centuries — from the mid-16th to the mid-19th — often dropped anchors here. In the early days of Brazil's epic settlement, soldiers, missionaries, prospectors and cattle farmers used Bahia as a staging point for their treks into the interior.

Such was Bahia's power that it was not only the capital of Brazil for two centuries but also the religious, political and economic center of the South Atlantic. Its archbishop ruled over the African bishoprics of Angola and São Tomé. A grand lady of the belie époque, Bahia grew fat on slave labor and the sugar, tobacco and carao of the lush coastal lands.

Today the city — officially Salvador but commonly called Bahia, which is also the name of the state — is only Brazil's fifth largest. But more than any other city, it shows why Brazil is so different from the rest of South America. It fits into neither Spanish America nor Anglo America. Though Bahia has Iberia's face and America's body, its soul is African.

On arrival, one immediately loses a sense of place. It is of little help to know one is midway along Brazil's 4,600-mile coastline. The beaches, the year-round tepid water and lush nature feel familiar enough. A traveler in the New World who seeks the reassuring images of old finds them quickly: The crum-bling mansions and counting houses of the planters and traders still dominate the center of town. The Roman Catholic Church, a beneficiary of the planters' earnings, built monasteries, convents and places of worship that rank among the finest of Iberian colonial architecture. But life all around those walls, the music, the gait, the smells and the markets, the worship and the street vendors, has stayed much closer to what the slaves brought. Perhaps there is no other city in this hemisphere so halfway Latin, halfway African, where this blend has forged such an exuberant place. Havana has become more sober. New Orleans far less African, Haiti is more African and more homogeneously black, but Port-au-Prince never gained the prosperity to exhibit its culture so ostentationsly. Bahia has mixed the strands of its white, Amerindian and black population so thoroughly, its people say it created a new race. Known as Bahia white or Bahia black, depending on one's view, this human blend has created its own food, its own religion and a lingua franca, none of which is quite matched in the rest of Brazil.

To visit Bahia's collection of overlapping wonders takes several days. Many spots are handsome, some quaint or gorgeous. Even the large poor neighborhoods have a sense of style. Instead of the deluge of cement that covers so much of the urban Third World, Bahia's modest homes are made of red-colored earth and painted in pastel tones.

UT for those of us who come from high-strung, First World schedules, it takes a little longer to enter the Bahian state of mind. If Brazilians have a knack for taking life in stride, Baianos are altogether and fully laid back, the nonchalant enemies of flap. The mind seems permitted to roam freely, without having to squeeze into extended focus. There is a great calm, that property of people not connected to clocks. Baianos break appointments without qualm. No one explains or apologizes. In lieu of a sense of time, however, a stranger is offered esteem, friendliness and bemused tolerance for one's un-Bahian ways.

No matter if a guide does not show up, one can do Bahia alone. From the flat waterfront area and its string of forts, one is hoisted in giant public elevators - encased in huge concrete towers - to the upper city. Here the finest museums and colonial buildings are in the historic part of town, within a few blocks. By one local count, more than 20,000 structures predate the mid-18th century.

Being fond of the past, Bahia has museums of all sorts. There are museums for postcards, for coins, for maritime maps and instruments. The most impressive ones, including the Museum of Sacred Art, have enough silver, sculptures, jewelry, furniture and paintings to dazzle students of colonial or religious art.

I rather liked the tiny, misnamed Museo da Cidade, or City Museum, once a private home, now full of the charm of mismatched and transplanted objects. It overlooks Pillorv Place (Largo do Pelourinho), the where slaves were punished until well into the 19th century. A first room, darkened with thick curtains, seemed like a haunted private theater. Large life-size mannequins were covered with faded costumes and talismans of Candomblé, the spiritist religion brought from Africa by the slaves. Up the narrow staircase there was a display of mementos and Victoriana, bequeathed by a prominent family. Peering at the satin sachets, silver finery and love notes, one felt almost indiscreet. Then, unexpectedly, another room offered an exhibition of African, gypsy and Hindu headdresses entitled "Thirty ways to tie the turban." Each style had a name, and so one encountered, all tied in knots, Andacious and Bizarre, Jovial and Triumphant. A few hundred yards up a climbing, narrow street is the former medical school. which seemed to have even more spirits and ghosts per square inch than most places in town. Its past ivory-colored grandeur is still tangible, despite missing roofs, decaying porticoes and peeling statues of ancient learned men. Along its garden paths, kept moist and moldy by the thick canopy of trees, one expected poets to be making notes about the passage of time.

In one recently restored wing is the country's new and only Afro-Brazilian Museum. A modest though fascinating exhibition traces Candomble objects, fetishes, masks and ceramics to their places of origin in the countries now known as Benin, Zaire and Angola. In its last room on huge wooden panels are the much extolled carvings of Candomble gods by the contemporary sculptor Carybé.
There is also a museum of medicine and an exhibition of Brazilian archaeology, spread out through the former hospital wing. On this surprising tour, during a moment of deep concentration among the Amerindian axes and funeral vases, I heard cheerful piano music coming in. It turned out that a ballet group had also taken up residence in a former hospital ward.

Outside, along the cobblestone streets and squares, tantamount to a large outdoor museum, a visitor with a taste for Baroque will find that the style reached heights never dreamed of along the Mediterranean. Craftsmen here had more rosewood to work with, gold was cheaper and imagination less bound by conventional forms. Church walls and alters contain pink clouds. tropical birds, mulatto faces, male and female figures that are far from demure. The Church of São Francisco de Assis has a plethora of gilded chembs and curlicues. Next door, the Church of the Third Order of São Francisco has one of the city's most masterful and ornate Baroque facades. Inside the church, the life-sized statues of saints reputedly led a double life: Smugglers, so the story goes, used to hide jewelry and other pieces of contraband under the saints' cloth robes. The city has close to 130 churches; it is a difficult task to see them all.

ORE numerous but less conspicuous are the places of worship of Candomble, Bahia's own syncretic religion, long persecuted and now fully accepted and even attended by the bourgeoisie. It was during the long periods when the African gods and spirits were outlawed that the slaves camouflaged them with names and properties of Catholic saints. All came to coexist in a new pantheon and, detached from West Africa, rites evolved with a life of

With two religious, if not practiced at least known by everyone, Bahia is the city that most merrily celebrates feast days of spirits and saints. The calendar bulges with events: the list includes the crossing of the Bay of All Saints (Jan. 1) by a magnificent, festooned fishing fleet carrying images of Christ. On the Day of Iemanja, the sea goddess (Feb. 2), thousands of people wade into the water, offering her perfume and white flowers.

On a recent night, Jorge Amado, Brazil's best-selling novelist, who lives in and loves Bahia with passion, had arranged for me to attend a private Candomble ceremony. It was the feast day of St. Barbara, or rather Iansa, her Candomble counterpart. Celebra-tions were going on when I visited the village of Bate Folha, just outside of town. Here, in a Candomble compound, the moon bounced off the whitewashed temple, the little outbuildings and the low white palisades built around half a dozen sacred trees. Inside the temple, the altar looked white, gold and Catholic, but the language of the inscriptions was Yoruba.

What followed, after men and women in Sunday finery embraced and sat at opposite ends of the nave, was hard for a noninitiate to appreciate fully. An outsider's perception was of a dozen women, dressed in the most impeccably ironed and starched white lace robes and kerchiefs, all of them carrying different amulets. They shuffled, danced, turned, moaned, shrieked and spun. Men. beat on a cluster of drums that had a variety of registers worthy of a church organ.

All but one of the women went into a trance, their bodies shaking as though swept by a live current. Accomplished initiates, they moved their arms onto their backs and spread their feet, seeking stability. The spirit would pass, the dancers went on.

Four hours later, with the aging dancers still going strong, the community was served dinner in the main house of the compound.

S it the exuberance of nature, fueled by three cultures, that has made the L Baianos Brazil's great orators — jugglers and gymnasts of the spoken word? Their favorite pastime is to sit and weave stories, night after night, eating heavily, drinking local firewaters or bitter cordials to dissolve the solid fare. And at the slightest excuse, Baianos burst into public speech, as baroque as the flourishes of their churches and with an almost oracular ring.

A friend traveling to Rio de Janeiro recently recalled sitting next to a Baiano who was making his maiden flight. As the voyage neared its end, the hostess delivered the: usual courtesies over the sound system, thanking the passengers. The Baiano rose to his feet. "On the contrary," he began, "it is we the passengers, who must thank you," and he workesd his way through a long list of merits of the crew. After several minutes, the Brazilians, a good-natured and tolerant kind, cheered the man.

Although the texts of these plays are in no sense political, the accurate picture depicted on the stage conveys a message that becomes clearer with time. By burying the political in the subtext, our contemporary dramatists instruct us without preaching, provoke us to thought and awareness by means of laughter and

Analyzing Oscar Roles

York Times reporter Sydney Schanberg in "The Killing Fields"):

"Why has anybody nominated me for an Oscar? I don't know, I think the first criterion why people get nominated is that the movies they play their characters in are good. After that, I guess it helps if it's a big part. I would have thought the things that are special about this man I play would have argued against a nomination. He's presented in an unvarmished way. Usually audience response to a character comes out of real sympathy for the guy. We didn't court sym-pathy, didn't make him cuter or make him get cozy with the andience. That's an opporumity you don't get very often in big parts in movies because sympathy has to go to the leading character. But if there's a noble end to acting it's where people get a chance to look at themselves as they are to themselves.

"I spent an intense three days with Sydne Schanberg over a period of a few weeks. It made the preparation of the part easier, made it easier to nail down the specifics of the character. But it was hard for him. There was no fencing around or feeling each other out. He poured himself out. It's a tremendons act of trust to put your life story in omeone's hands.`

farmer's wife faced with the forced foreclosure of her family farm in "Conntry"):

"It's hard for me to separate the playing of the character from the making of the film, because it's my film. It sprang out of the knowledge I had of what was going on in rural America, and I co-produced it. I think we made a good, small, honest film — not sentimental, not romanticized. With my happiness over being nominated, there's disappointment that my nomination was the only nomination we got. I have to separate myself from what Hollywood calls success and think of success on a more intimate level 'Country' has been used for organizing farmers and educating them to the fact that they are not isolated cases. I've gotten letters from farmers who said they hadn't been to a movie in 15 or 25 years before 'Country' and that they had stood up at the end and

"The part of Jewell Ivy was more familiar to me than any other part I've played. I drew from all my aunts in rural Minnesota. I wanted to convey the tremendous strength and tenacity of these women in balance with a heartbreaking vulnerability. Jewell Ivy is not the type of character you can embellish and make bigger than life. I tried to keep my performance absolutely honest, even though that was not the most showy acting choice.

Jeff Bridges (for his role as an alien explorer from a distant planet in "Starman"): "When I first got the part I thought that the sky was the limit, that I could go anywhere with the character. But the line I had to walk became thinner and thinner. I had to be as consistent as possible in order not to rip the fabric of the love story.

How do you create an alien? I thought about some of the crazy people I've known who I thought might be alien. I observed my three-and-a-half-month old daughters be cause I wanted to have their innocence, the way kids make a mistake without knowing it's a mistake. I worked with a friend who's a dancer with isolating parts of my body and moving just one at a time. It was almost as though Starman was seated in the head and riding the body, giving each limb an assign-

"The character is a device to look at ourselves in a fresh way. I share with Starman the belief that we shortchange the positive side of ourselves - our capacity to love."

BRINGS BACK MEMORIES OF HAPPIER TIMES.

f WHO WOULD have thought a new play on botany would prove a source of constant hilarity throughout the evening? But despite the lethargy the topic instantly induced in one at school, such a subject is keeping audiences rolling throughout Europe.

PART OF ITS immense charm is that "Make mine a large one" has such a wide appeal. (Though one must confess that those with a more cultured taste will probably find it wittier than those who labour under the misconception that Shakespeare's 'Taming of the Shrew' is a course in animal husbandry.) The plot has an international flavour. The main personalities are drawn from countries as diverse as Morocco, Saxony and Indo-China and feature such characters as Coriander, Angelica, Orris and Juniper. Although at first sight such a mixture might appear a little uncomfortable, it is the skill with which they have been seamlessly blended that guarantees the end result.

I raise my glass to the creators of the production, Bombay Gin. It is indeed their unique distillation that keeps one amused.

And I for one shall oft return to my favourite bar to watch it run and run-into my glass.

Dow Off in Mixed N.Y. Session

NEW YORK - Prices on the New York

Stock Exchange made a mixed showing Thursday after an early rally faded.

But analysts noted that the late selling was concentrated in a few big-name stocks. Groups like food and utility issues remained strong. The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, up more than 6 points in the early going, was down 4.20 at 1,260.71 by the close. Gainers, however, outnumbered losers by more than 4 to 3.

Volume came to 99.78 million shares, down from 101.04 million Thursday. The exchange's composite index edged up .05 to 103.98.

Stocks had the credit markets working in their favor, with interest rates down considera-bly for both Treasury bills and bonds. However, the rally in stocks that began on Wednesday faltered as the session progressed. Analysts said investing institutions were apparently intent on selling some blue-chip issues as they prepare their portfolios for first-quarter reports.

The day began with what was billed as the first visit ever to the NYSE trading floor by an American president in office. President Ronald Reagan called for support for his budget plan, and then rang the bell sounding the start of

M-1 Falls $500 Million

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The basic U.S. money sup-ply fell $500 million in mid-March, the Federal Reserve said Thursday.

The basic supply, called M-1, dropped to a seasonally adjusted $570.1 billion in the week ended March 18 from $570.6 billion the previous week, the central bank said. M-1 is a measure of money supply growth that includes currency in circulation, travelers checks and checking deposits at financial insti-

Others argued, however, that enthusiasm for the utilities betokened expectations of further declines in interest rates, which might benefit the market as a whole.

the market as a whole.

Unocal led the active list, up 2 at 49%. An investment group headed by T. Boone Pickens, chairman of Mesa Petroleum, increased its stake in the company to 13.6 percent with the purchase of a large block of shares Wednesday.

The group, which had previously declared it was buying the stock strictly for investment purposes, said Thursday that it was considering seeking to gain control of the company or to restructure it.

Lord Tennyson's classic lines ... "Ring out the old, ring in the new, ring out the false ring in the true", have relevancy even in milieu's as nonpoetic as Wall Street. In its summer of 1982, while the Dowwas drooping under 800, we defied prevailing opinic predicting that the "DJI WILL TOUCH 1,000 BEFORE HITTING 750".

On August 9, 1982, BARRON's, in mirroring the malaise on the "Street", mused "The market seems to be saying it's seen the future and it doesn't work".

The rest is history; the Bull rampaged. Joseph Granville, who had in 198 envisioned the DOW collapsing "under 650", was among the prophets of doom within behind STAR WAR semantics to justify their myopia. Now that the DOW his slipped from the 1300 level, the "Crowd" is cringing, mesmerized by pariahs despair, the same species, who at $800 an ounze, urged investors to hoard preciot metals, antique Chinese commodes and other collectibles, awaiting a fisc Apocalypse. The United States has not wifted: Visigoths have not stormed the Crac Horse Saloon in Paris; Blue Birds still fly over the white cliffs of Dover.

Our forthcoming letter discusses why the DJI may catapult over 2,000, why it "Power Elite" relishes downside spasms; corrections that enable them to buy in weakness, ultimately selling into strength, defying the manic-depressive behavior most investors and their guru's.

U.S. Gap On Trade Worsens

Exports Suffer Steep Decline

WASHINGTON - The U.S. trade deficit widened to $11.4 billion in February, the worst showing since September, as exports suf-fered their steepest decline in seven years, the government reported Thursday. The Commerce Department said last month's deficit was 11.3 percent higher than the $10.3-billion deficit recorded in January, and was the biggest monthly imbalance since an $11.5-billion deficit last September.

The deterioration in February resulted from an 8-percent drop in export sales, the largest monthly decline since a 10.3-percent fall in anuary 1978. Last year, the United States had a record $123.3-billion merchandise trade deficit. Commerce Secre-tary Malcolm Baldrige has predict-ed the deficit this year will climb to

The country's poor trading performance has been blamed in part on the high value of the dollar, which makes U.S. goods more ex-pensive and harder to sell overseas while increasing Americans' appetite for cheaper imports.

Commenting on the worsening figures, Mr. Baldrige noted that for the first two months of the year the deficit was running at an annual rate of $130 billion, worse than last year's $123.3-billion imbalance.
"U.S. exporters continue to struggle with the handicaps imposed by the strong dollar, slower growth abroad and by foreign import barriers," Mr. Baldrige said.

Further increases in imports and higher trade deficits lie ahead," he added, noting that even with the declines in recent days, the dollar is still valued 2.2 percent above its December level.

As usual, the United States sustained its largest trade deficit with Japan. This was $4.2 billion, 15.2 percent above the $3.7-billion imbalance in January. The deficit with Canada was $1.8 billion; with Taiwan, $1.1 billion; and with Western Europe, $1.9 billion.
The department said overall imports dropped 1.3 percent in February, falling to $29.3 billion compared with $29.7 billion in January. The drop came from an 11.8-percent decline in petroleum imports, which in turn offset increases in imports of Japanese cars, clothing, and motor vehicle and tractor parts. Imports of cars from Japan rose 47 percent in February to a total of $1.56 billion.

The February decline in exports reflected decreases in sales of various manufactured goods and agricultural commodities.

Sales of aircraft, electrical machinery, office equipment, automobiles and fertilizers were all down from their January levels, the de-partment reported. U.S. sales of manufactured goods totaled $12 billion in February, down 9.9 percent from the January level.

Sheraton Gains a Foothold in China

Prestige Hotel Turns to U.S. Management

By John F. Burns New York Times Service

BEIJING - John Kapioltas smiled when someone suggested Sheraton Corp.'s entry into the hotel business in China, was like the cavalry riding in.

"I wouldn't say we see it quite like that," the chairman of the botel chain said recently, referring to his company's contract, signed March 15, to take over management of the Great Wall

The $75-million luxury hotel is a prestige project owned jointly by a U.S. company, E-S Pacific Development & Construction Co., and the Chinese state tourist monopoly, China International Travel Service. It represents the largest single investment involving U.S. interests since Deng Xiaoping reopened China to foreign equity holdings six years

Mr. Kapioltas, 57, was here to sign the management contract that gave the ITT-owned Sheraton Corp. its first foothold in a communist country. With repre-sentatives of the owners looking on, he was reluctant to say what many people in Beijing have known for some time: that the hotel badly needed an injection of professional management of the kind that a large U.S. hotel

Guards posted outside the Great Wall Hotel.

For months before the Sheraton agreement, there was talk that all was not well at the Great Wall, the 22-story tower of shimmering gray steel that stands over the flat brown landscape of Beijing. The hotel, which opened in December 1983, has been troubled by thin patronage at its 10 restaurants and lounges, low room occupancy outside the tourist season and difficulty in maintaining four-star standards among its 1,700 Chinese employco-owner, E-S Pacific, have answered published reports that the hotel was in financial trouble by insisting that its finances were sound. But diplomats here say negotiations last year with the London-based bank syndicate that put together the original loan package led to a "stretching out" of the repayment terms, and that at least one participant, Al-fied Bank International, balked at the new terms. Although no plan was disclosed, the Pickens group said it could offer to buy a controlling interest of the company. Other alternatives, it said, would be a company program to repurchase Unocal stock from shareholders or the sale or distribution of Unocal's assets.

The group also said that if shareholders agreed to adjourn the meeting until June 28, it might put forward its own candidates for the Unocal board.

France Said to Seek Trade-Money Tie in Talks

PARIS - France has threatened to block negotiations on trade liberalization that have been sought by the Reagan administration, unless the talks are accompanied by a commitment from major industrialized countries to reform the world monetary system, French and U.S. officials said Thursday.

Reagan administration officials in Washington, speaking on the condition that they not be identi-fied, rejected linking trade and monetary reform.

LITERARY CRITICISM: Essays on Literature. American Writers. English Writers. 1484 pp.

LITERARY CRITICISM: French Writers. Other European Writers. The Prefaces to the New York Edition. 1408 pp.

By Henry James. Edited by Leon Edel and Mark Wilson. $27.50 each. The Library of America, 14 East 60th Street, New York, N. Y. 10022.

Reviewed by Michiko Kakutani

IN the right hands, Henry James believed, literary criticism could be a "supremely beneficent" art, but it demanded a rare "cluster of qualities" - curiosity and patience and perception at the pitch of passion and expreson." As he saw it, the critic should be "the real helper of the artist, a torch-bearing outrider, the interpreter, the brother," a kind of delicate tuning fork, keyed to pick up nuances of both beauty and craft.

Now, thanks to these two superb volumes, contemporary readers are afforded the opportunity to assess James's critical ocuvre - and the simple, sensuous pleasure of reading the master's improvisations on literature, American, English and European. The books have been published, with scrupulous attention to detail, by the Library of America — a brave, new enterprise, dedicated to issuing the works of prominent American writers in an authoritative form; and they contain a comprehensive collection of James's literary criticism, plus the 18 prefaces he wrote for the New York edition. More than a third of the pieces have never appeared in book form before.

In these essays, James illuminated his own writing process and the ideals he cherished as a novelist: his love of exactitude: his conviction that a story should be coherent in form, as organic as a living creature; his passionate belief that novels, like old-fashioned paintings, should try to represent life. As a critic, however, he tried never to impose his values upon the works of others; and he wrote, with admiration and perception, about talents as dissimilar as Dickens, Trollope, Hawthorne, Howells and Flaubert. He could delight equally, say, in Stevenson's "Treasure Island," with its "mirac-

Solution to Previous Puzzle FACT HART TROPE OLEO HOMES Laine Tape BOARDINGSCHOOL TOO ASH TEA OVEN SANEST ATLE ELIS RAREE SHIVERMETIMBERS SONNET ERLE TILA GEE ETC VEER RIFF ulous coincidences and buried doubloons," and in the more "homely and prosaic" virtues of Goothe's "Wilhelm Meister."

James labundant catholicity of taste reflect ed not only his deep reservoir of sympathy for others, but also an achieved, philosophical position. He believed that the novel was the "most magnificent form of art," and that its magic derived from its elasticity, its radical freedom from 4-5-sition. "The house of ficmagic derived from its elasticity, its rancal freedom from definition. "The house of fiction," he wrote, has "not one window, but a million," and "he only obligation, to which in advance we may hold a novel, without incurring the accusation of being arbitrary, is that it be interesting."

What James would not tolerate was the vulgar, the egotist and the bogus; and when he suspected that a writer was not making the most of his gifts, he could be sharply dismissive. Reviewing Walt Whitman's "Drum Taps," he wrote, "to become adopted as a national poet, it is not enough" "to discharge the undigested contents of your blotting-book into the lap of the public," He complained that "Les Fleurs du mai" revealed Baudelaire's "ludicrously puerile view" of evil — for him, evil "begins outside and not inside, and consists primarily of a great deal of lurid landscape and unclean furniture." unclean furniture."

For the most part, though, James was less interested in passing judgment on a given text than in using it to shed light on an author's overall achievement. He believed that a novel reflected "the quality of the mind of the producer," and he felt that critics had a responsibility to interpret a writer's inner life and public personality. As a result, his essays are filled with wonderful cameos — character sketches almost as vivid as those found in his sketches almost as vivid as those found in his novels. Kipling, for instance, emerges as a cheeky youth who "rushes about making people jump with the deep sounds, the sportive exaggerations of tones that issue from its pain; ed lips," and Turgenev, as a "storyteller who has taken notes" "sur le vif."

The transactions between life and art continually fascinated James, and this biographical impulse led him, in these essays, to reflect upon the husbanding of material and talent and the consequences of environment, social and familial, upon a writer's sensibility.

In his book-length essay on Hawthome, James spent a lot of time marveling at how devoid this author's life was of "social accidents" and "literary incident." He discussed the narrowness of Hawthorne's life, spent nearly entirely in small New England towns; the unsophisticated appeal of his work, and the ways in which his innocent, yet self-conscious, temperament typified the native genius. It is almost as though James — like the hero of "The Jolly Corner" — were meditating upon a possible alter-ego, what he might have been had he stayed home and never gone to Europe. In fact the character of James so permeates these essays that the reader is left with an insistent after-image of both the writer and the man. His presence is there in the magisterial style and the elaborate, supple prose. And it is there, too, in certain recurrent themes - the preoccupation with the United States and Europe, with women as heroines, and with what James called the "modern condition."

Rookies come in all sizes and shapes and from half a dozen countries, more of them come with college degrees these days, some of them even come with agents and reputations, and all of them come with hope. Mickey Mantle remembers that he came to the Yankees in 1951 with one pair of blue slacks and a straw suitcase.

The word these days in the training camps in Florida and Arizona is that 1985 looks like a modest year for rookies. No Dwight Gooden, with his 276 strikeouts last year. No Cal Ripken Jr., who was rookie of the year in 1982 and most valuable player in 1983.

For Vince Coleman, the road to the big leagues has climbed almost straight up. At Florida A & M. he majored in physical education and stole a record total of 65 bases in 1981. Then he went to Johnson City in the Rookie Leegue, where he hit 250 and stole 43 bases; then to Macon in the South Atlantic League, where he won the batting (350) and base-stealing (145) titles. After that, he was vanited from Class A baseball to Class AAA at Louisville and, although he stole 101 bases, he saw his batting average slide by 93 points.
"He made too big a jump last year, from A-ball to triple A," Herzog says. "If we leave here injuryfree, he'll open at Louisville. If somebody needed a center fielder. he'd be the rookie of the year. The best thing I heard came from George Kissell, 40 years a Cardi-nal. He says this kid is the best rookie he's ever seen."

CHICAGO WHITE SOX Tony LaRussa sits on a chair outside the White Sox dugout in Sarasota, Florida, and compiles lineups for several days. The White Sox may have more good rookies than any other team this year.

LaRussa considers the fact that the White Sox plunged from first place to fifth, then traded LaMarr and Calvin Schiraldi as Hoyt to the San Diego Padres for Sarting pitcher, Nelson four players: Tim Lollar and Bill s as the chief backup in left Long, both pitchers; Luis Salazar, the Detroit Tigers; Jose who plays third base and the outco Giants; Herm Win- friend from Venezuela, a 21-year-... i in center field and Joe old rookie shortstop named Ozzie Christensen figures to make the Mets as the fourth or fifth outfielder, and as a frequent right-handed pinch-hitter. At California State, be hit 23 home runs as a junior, tying the school record set by Tim Wallach, now with the Expos.

He made his major league debut last September as a pinch-hitter for Darryl Strawberry, which should earn him a spot in a trivia quiz someday. He walked. A few days later, he got his first hit: a double off Steve Carlton, which isn't too shabby, either.

DETROIT TIGERS It's not easy to make a team that won the World Series, but 21-yearold Nelson Simmons will do it as a reserve left fielder behind Larry Simmons could replace him.

MONTREAL EXPOS When the Expos traded Gary Carter to the Mets, they got four young players in return and filled three positions at once: catcher, shortstop and center field. The man in center is 23-year-old Herm Winningham, a left-handed hitter with a distinction: He was drafted by the Pittsburgh Pirates in 1979, the Milwaukee Brewers in 1980, the Expos later in 1980 and the Mets, who finally signed him, in 1981.

He does not hit home runs, but he hits a lot of other things. He ended last season at Tidewater at .281, then averaged .407 in September for the Mets.

Joe Hesketh is a left-handed pitcher who also owns a distinction: After one season in the mi-nors in 1980, he underwent elbow surgery and did not appear in a game again for 684 days. But he has never had a losing record in pro-ball, and he went 12-3 last year at Indianapolis before getting the call Manager Jim Frey has been giving Dunston every chance to replace Larry Bowa, who suspects the deck is stacked in Dunston's favor. But the Cubs wonder why Dunston's 300 batting average in the lower minors plunged to .233 at Triple-A last summer, and why he made 58 errors. They also have Chris Speier as experienced backup

"I want to be a star," Dunston says, sounding the theme for all 1985's rookies. "But, if I'm not ready, I don't want to embarrass

The Bruins earned a berth in Friday night's championship game at Madison Square Garden against Indiana, which earlier Wednesday evening beat Tennessee, 74-67, as Uwe Blab scored 24 points and Steve Alford got 23.

UCLA led, 36-33, at intermission and six times held nine-point leads before Louisville pulled even behind a run led by Billy Thompson, who scored 16 points. Thompson scored four straight points as the Cardinals made it 56-56 with 5:30 left in the game.

Then, in the last five minutes, Wright took charge, scoring six points during the streak that gave UCLA a 67-58 lead with 1:06 left.

"I thought the difference in the game was Brad Wright," said Loujame was brait whight, said Dol-isville's coach, Denny Crum. The 6-foot-11 (2.10-meter) Wright made 10 of 11 shots, got 12 rebounds and blocked four shots.

The first half was closely played, with UCLA holding the biggest lead, of five points.

Nigel Mignel scored 20 points for UCLA, getting seven on foul shots in the final minute. The Bruins, 20-12, have won 11 of their last

SEATTLE — Karcem Abdul-Jabbar and Byron Scott each scored 21 points Wednesday night as the Los Angeles Lakers routed

Jack Sikma was injured Seattle has lost four of five games, and only one of those losses has been by fewer than 15 points.

Los Angeles, which had a 10game winning streak ended Tues-day night in Portland, led all the way in this one-sided contest, as six Lakers scored in double figures. In other games it was Atlanta 125, Indiana 99; Boston 105, New Jersey 95; Philadelphia 115, Washington 97; Detroit 127, Houston 110: San Antonio 121, Golden State 120 and Utah 116, Dallas

Early in the second quarter, the Sonics made their only serious run, closing to 42-36 as they outscored the Lakers, 11-2, with Tom Chambers and Cory Blackwell each getting four points.

But the Lakers blitzed the Sonics, 20-9, over the final 6:30 of the second quarter to post a 62-45 halftime lead. During that rally, Scott scored eight of the 16 points he got

Seattle's coach, Lenny Wilkens, said the Lakers "took advantage of our young players."

Los Angeles Times Service, LOS ANGELES — News item: Defensive end Jack Youngblood of the Rams rejects doctors' recommendation that he undergo back surgery before playing football again.

Comment: Fortunately it is only Jack's spine, not something serious like a finger or opinion, and will undergo treatment recom-mended by noted orthopedic specialist Matt The Millen treatment consists of putting whatever body part hurts you into a carpen-ter's vise and yanking it around until it feels first baseman, joins the non-talkers. He won't talk to the press this season, in order to avoid Comment: This will free Cooper to do the important things ballplayers do to get ready to play, such as play cards, open mail, play loud music on loud-music players, chew tobacco, spit tobacco juice on the floor, and

Good luck, Cec. If not talking to the media improves your performance, let me know. I might try it myself next season.

News item: The Los Angeles Lakers' Michael Cooper injured on dance floor, out for Comment: If you missed this item, it is because it is just being reported now. Cooper was among the celebrators at a 40th birthday party for his coach, Pat Riley, at a swank, nightchub. Somehow. Cooper stumbled and fell to the dance floor, clutching his right knee. Riley and the team doctor, Steve Lombardo, rushed to Cooper's side. Lombardo instantly diagnosed a serious knee injury.

But, Cooper recovered completely in about two minutes, jumped to his feet, high-fived co-conspirator Lombardo and boogied across the dance floor.

News item: David Bey, in a press conference after losing to Larry Holmes, claims he was weakened by a cold.

Comment: A weak alibi, at best. Once again the sport of boxing is embarrassed by its failure to install an efficient system of prefight examination and certification of ex-

Too many fighters are stepping into the ring poorly prepared for post-fight alibi-making, and it's time for reform.

News item: U.S. Football League artendance down. Comment: It is time for the USFL to make the switch to indoor football. That would cut overhead, since the game would be seven-man football, and cheerleading squads could be cut in half. Moving indoors would also boost scoring, since the field would be 40 yards long.

Also, with a Plexiglass wall around the field, there would be no running out of bounds to avoid tackles. Sure it sounds like a radical move, but look

Onsets of Jogging Envy

By Russell Baker NEW YORK — I suffer long bouts of envy. The latest set in a few months ago when somebody said Cary Grant had just had his 80th birthday, or was about to have his 80th birthday, or whatever — I

Grant being in the vicinity of 80. I immediately collapsed into envy, which is nasty stuff. It not only makes you unhappy with yourself, it makes you angry at the object of your envy, who is proba-bly a perfectly decent person, as I assume Cary Grant is.

Nevertheless, the news about his octogenarianism instantly threw me into a fit of sour envy. What right did Cary Grant have to look better at 80 than I had at 30?

I have had trouble all my life with Cary Grant. At 18 I wanted to know why Cary Grant was entitled to a dimpled smile while I had to put up with a cowlick and ears like

And now here was this cup of gall about Cary Grant at 80. All right, Cary Grant, I said to myself, I've had enough of your superiority. And I began a long-term program that would eventually make me look as good at 60 as Cary Grant had looked at 80.

Thus the following week found me joining the neighbors who trot around and around and around the block at dawn, an hour I have always considered fit only for firing squads and snoring.

On the third morning during the 10th circuit of the block, my Cary Grant envy ceased abruptly. "Be honest," I urged myself. "You can roll out at dawn for the rest of your life and still not look as good at 60 as Cary Grant does at 80 - am I

I had to agree that I was, but next morning I rolled out again anyhow. Why? I had moved into another form of envy. This was inspired by the extraordinary number of trotters who wore headsets linked to

> That was not all. In my hand I carried a portable telephone, ready to do business in an instant. My family said, "What business? Who's up at dawn except joggers and policemen finishing the grave-yard shift?" I pointed out that at dawn the London gold market had already been open for hours.

Well, of course, in the Wall Street news I learned about the people who raided the Phillips Petroleum Co.

Talk about envy! "Why are these people entitled to make millions raiding Phillips Petroleum when I don't even know what Phillips Petroleum is?" I cried.

If I had known, $140 million could have been mine instead of these other two fellows'. But what would I do with $140 million? Buy a two-bedroom apartment with a window in Manhattan, of course. That would still leave a little. Several million possibly. Might be enough to get me outfitted by Cary

Actor Ken Ogata: 'A Tight, Clear Image'

By Christine Chapman TOKYO — "I'm an actor's A actor, not a star. I'm not like John Wayne or Toshiro Mifune," said Ken Ogata, who at 47 is much admired in Japan as a film, stage and television actor. He should soon become known to Western audiences for his role as

Yukio Mishima in a U.S. film about the celebrated novelist who committed ritual suicide in Tokyo "Mishima." which will premiere at the Cannes International Film Festival in May, will add a new dimension to Ogata's gallery of virile characters - the strong, usually silent type who says more through action than through "In film I have to have a tight. clear image, a control of the person I'm playing. Otherwise, I become invisible," Ogata said, adding, "Films capture the spirit. On the stage I have to push myself, my spirit, onto the audience. A stage actor since his apprentice days in 1958 with Shinkoku Geki, a troupe born of the trend toward realistic drama, Ogata has worked in film as well throughout his career.

He stayed with Shinkoku Geki for 10 years, being trained by Ryutaro Tatsumi and Shogo Shimada, who he said gave him his "backbone as an actor." He played a boxer in a 1960 movie, but his first popular break did not come until 1965. Then, on NHK, the national television network, he played the title role in a historical drama about Hideyoshi, the late-16th-century military ruler of

During the past 10 years Ogata has acquired a reputation in movies as "the most versatile of all Japanese actors," said Donald Richie, a Western authority on Japanese cinema. Ogata is the only man to have won the Japanese Academy Award for best actor twice: in 1978 for "Kichuiku," or 'A Brute of a Man," and in 1983 for his role as a farmer who abandons his aged mother on a moun-tain in "The Ballad of Nar-ayama," which won the Palme d'Or at Cannes that year.

Ogata is a talented, imaginative performer with "an extraordinary command of technique," Richie said. The actor's naturalistic style closely reflects the Japanese idea of what a certain type of man must be like: the superstitious farmer bowing to the customs of his village, a common gangster in "Vengeance is Mine," a tyrannical, womanizing husband in pre-war Japan in the recent "Kai," and now a famous novelist obsessed with the idea of a spectacu-

"To play or act naturally is the most difficult thing to do," Ogata said during a long interview in a coffee shop across from the NHK studios, where he was making a prison film, playing what he called a "Steve McQueen-type." Being an actor is not to express one's thoughts in words but rather in action. There are so many things I can tell in movement but not in words."

Personable and entertaining, Ogata is aware of the impact of restrained, and comic, gestures. He uses pauses often to heighten effect. His eyes are his strongest instrument of expression. He has an athletic body, the muscles deliberately well-developed for the Mishima role. To prepare to be Mishima, who transformed his slender physique into a muscular one when he was 30, Ogata underwent a body-building program.

"When I saw the rushes," Ogata said, grinning, "I was sur-prised that I had a beautiful body. I didn't look like myself. But the most difficult thing to create is something in the head, not the physical. 'What is he thinking?' was the problem.

Ozata decided: "He was thinking how to die beautifully."

Playing Mishima was grueling, he said. "It put grey in my hair and hurt my eyesight. After trying the suicide scene for 20 times," he said, demonstrating with a gri-mace, "all of a sudden I couldn't read the papers. I put every possible strength into this film, everything I learned in acting."

He tells with relish of being offered the part by the American director Paul Schrader. At first, he said. Schrader looked for a Mishima look-alike. He talked to 50 actors.

"I was number 51," Ogata added wryly.

"When they announced the posed of episodes from Mishima's life and from his novels. It depicts him as a man who tried to make his life and death an art form. Since the novels send to be autobiographical, contriving his life into a drama was the natural progression for Mishima.

In a biography, "The Life and Death of Yukio Mishima," Henry Scott Stokes, comparing the Japanese novelist to Andre Gide. wrote that, for both, it was "impossible perhaps to put a distance between themselves and their work." Scott Stokes, who knew Mishima during the last few years of his life, said he "endlessly rehearsed his own death" in his novels and in two films in which his character committed hara-

A devotee of the bloody samurai ethic, a rightist who harangued Japan about its indifference to the imperial system, Mishima had crossed the line between fiction and reality. At age 45 he disem-boweled himself before members of his private army who then, on his orders, decapitated him. Many Japanese, including Eisaku Sato, then prime minister, called him mad; many still do.

Ogaza said Schrader chose him for the part because he, Ogata, had "a writer's eyes and could create lunacy, kyoki."

"But my Mishima is not crazy," he added. "He was a seeker of beauty, in his literature and in his daily life. That's how I played

His performance does not suggest the writer's homosexuality, Ogata said. "I myself don't act as a homosexual. The novels touch on it subtly." The script dramatizes erotic scenes from the novels in which both men and women not sure. "This film is certainly American-made, but as long as I'm in it, it's a Japanese 'Mishima.' For example, Paul insisted I use more hand movement. I said, 'No, I won't do it,' He insisted, I resisted. It's an international

Ogata: "Actor's actor."

The film may not be released in Japan. Not only is Mishima not a hero to the average Japanese, but, trying to protect her husband's reputation, Yoko Mishima, disapproves of the script, though she agreed to the project at first. Further, the extreme right may object to the portrayal of Mishima's fanaticism

One indication that there is in fact pressure from somewhere is that the film was not nominated for entry in the first Tokyo International Film Festival, scheduled for May 31 through June 9.

Warner Brothers will release the film in the United States and Europe during the summer and fall, according to Filmlink, but Toho-Towa, which owns the distribution rights in Japan, remains undecided.

Ogata said he believed the Japanese opposition would end after Cannes. He plans to attend the festival with Schrader.

Ogata sees Mishima as "a seeker of beauty," and himself as a good actor. "A good actor has the heart of a child," he said. "He has eyes that can see what beauty is."
